Julia Louise Pereira is a multidisciplinary artist who prioritizes capturing the beauty and wonder in nature by creating whimsical illustrations. The inspiration for the murals created for the Catchbasin Art Project “From Streets to Streams” was to highlight the endangered animals that live in the waterways that travel through the city. It’s hard to imagine how these creatures are directly impacted by people’s actions, so she wanted to create a positive message to show that everyone is all connected.

OUR HOME

@ BAFFIN CRES.

This mural is centered around a tiny frog that calls our streams and wetlands home, along with his friends, the Redside Dace. This bold, picture book inspired piece is meant to engage audiences of all ages and inspire curiosity about what happens to our water once it goes down the drain.

SPOTTING THE SPOTTED TURTLE

@ CENTURY GARDENS PARK PLAYGROUND

This mural is centered around the Spotted Turtle, an endangered species that lives in our wetlands and is affected by what we put down our drains. The graphic, colorful style is meant to catch the audience’s eye and get them to ask questions about how they are affecting the natural world around them.
